NEW QUESTION: 1A company wants to implement user authentication for access to HTTP/HTTPS services against active directory using a single domain controller and multiple XGS appliances.Which authentication deployment method should be used to achieve this?A. Deploy user authentication through the User Authentication Portal to prompt users for their Active Directory credentials.B. Deploy passive user authentication to authenticate users automatically when they log on to the network using Active Directory.C. Deploy passive authentication to authenticate users automatically using local XGS user credentials.D. Deploy user authentication through the User Authentication Portal to prompt users for local XGS user credentials.Answer: BExplanation:Configuring passive authentication with the Active Directory server.This use case describes how to configure passive authentication to control web access based on user identity. Passive authentication requires installing the Logon-event Scanner software on the Active Directory server. In this example, a Windows domain user logs on to a client machine that belongs to a Windows domain. The Logon-event Scanner gathers the Windows logon events and sends the information to XGS. This allows for controlling user access to websites without requesting the user to authenticate to XGS.References: Implementation Guide for IBM Security Network Protection ('XGS for Techies') second edition, Version 2.0, page 151
