NEW QUESTION: 2After copying a sensitive document from his desktop to a flash drive, Joe, a user, realizes that the document is no longer encrypted. Which of the following can a security technician implement to ensure that documents stored on Joe's desktop remain encrypted when moved to external media or other network based storage?A. Whole disk encryptionB. Removable disk encryptionC. Database record level encryptionD. File level encryptionAnswer: D
Explanation:Encryption is used to ensure the confidentiality of information. In this case you should make use of file level encryption. File level encryption is a form of disk encryption where individual files or directories are encrypted by the file system itself. This is in contrast to full disk encryption where the entire partition or disk, in which the file system resides, is encrypted. Incorrect Answers:A. Full disk encryption can be used to encrypt an entire volume with 128-bit encryption. When the entire volume is encrypted, the data is not accessible to someone who might boot another operating system in an attempt to bypass the computer's security. Full disk encryption is sometimes referred to as hard drive encryption. This would be best to protect data that is at rest.B. Removable disk encryption will be used to prevent unauthorized access to data storage, but it does not replace file encryption in all situations.C. Database record level encryption is not going to ensure that Joe's desktop's documents will remain encrypted when moved since Joe might have many other types of files other than database files.References: Dulaney, Emmett and Chuck Easton, CompTIA Security+ Study Guide, 6th Edition, Sybex, Indianapolis, 2014, pp. 59,237, 290
