NEW QUESTION: 1In intrusion detection system vernacular, which account is responsible for setting the security policy for an organization?A. DirectorB. SupervisorC. AdministratorD. Root

Answer: CExplanation:The administrator is the person responsible for setting the security policy for an organization and is responsible for making decisions about the deployment and configuration of the IDS.Incorrect Answers:A, C: Almost every operating system in use today employs the concept of differentiation between users and groups at varying levels. As an example, there is always a system administrator (SA) account that has godlike control over everything: root in Unix/Linux, admin (or a deviation of it) in Windows, administrator in Apple OS X, supervisor in Novell NetWare, and so on.D. A director is a person from a group of managers who leads or supervises a particular area of a company, program, or project.
