NEW QUESTION: 1 A company determines a need for additional protection from rogue devices plugging into physical ports around the building. Which of the following provides the highest degree of protection from unauthorized wired network access?
A. MAC filtering
B. 802.1x
C. Intrusion Prevention Systems
D. Flood guards
Answer: B
Explanation: IEEE 802.1x is an IEEE Standard for Port-based Network Access Control (PNAC). It is part of the IEEE 802.1 group of networking protocols and provides an authentication mechanism to wireless devices connecting to a LAN or WLAN.
Incorrect Answers:
A. Intrusion prevention systems (IPS), also known as intrusion detection and prevention systems (IDPS), are network security appliances that monitor network and/or system activities for malicious activity. The main functions of intrusion prevention systems are to identify malicious activity, log information about this activity, attempt to block/stop it, and report it. Plugging a device into the network would not be considered malicious activity so the IPS would not prevent it.
B. MAC filtering is typically used in wireless networks. In computer networking, MAC Filtering (or GUI filtering, or layer 2 address filtering) refers to a security access control method whereby the 48-bit address assigned to each network card is used to determine access to the network.
C. Flood guards are used to prevent network flooding attacks such as DoS, SYN floods, ping floods etc. They are not used to prevent devices connecting to a network.

NEW QUESTION: 3 Which two statements describe the capabilities of the Distribution Constructor?
A. Checkpoints are used to pause the build, thereby allowing the running of a script to modify the resulting ISO image.
B. ISO images for use with the Automated Installer (AI) can be created.
C. A single installation server can be used to create ISO images for Solaris 10 and Solaris 11.0 operating systems.
D. A single installation server can be used to create ISO images, for SPARC and x86 architectures.
E. Bootable USB images can be created for SPARC and x86 architectures.
Answer: A, B
Explanation: A: Oracle Solaris Image Types include: x86 or SPARC ISO Image for Automated Installations - The Oracle Solaris release includes the automated installer tool. The automated installer (AI) is used to automate the installation of the Oracle Solaris OS on one or more SPARC and x86 systems over a network.
D: You can also create custom scripts to modify your installation image. Then, you can add checkpoints to the manifest file to run these custom scripts. You can use the options provided in the `distro_const` command to stop and restart the build process at various stages in the image-generation process, in order to check and debug the image that is being built. This process of stopping and restarting during the build process is called checkpointing. Checkpointing is optional. Default checkpoints are specified in each manifest file. Incorrect: Not B: Only for x86, not for SPARC-Oracle Solaris x86 LiveCD - You can create an x86 ISO image that is comparable to the LiveCD image that's distributed as an Oracle Solaris release. You can also modify the content of this ISO image by adding or removing packages. You can revise the default settings for the resulting booted environment to create a custom ISO image or USB image. Note: The distribution constructor creates images based on settings specified in XML files, called manifest files. The manifest files contain specifications for the contents and parameters for the ISO images that you create using the distribution constructor. The distribution-constructor package provides sample manifests that can be used to create a custom x86 Live Media ISO, an x86 or SPARC Automated Install ISO image, or an x86 or SPARC text installation ISO image. The elements in each manifest file provide preset, default values that will create the type of ISO image you need. You can manually edit these preset elements in a manifest file to customize the resulting image. In addition, you can create custom scripts to further modify your image. Then, reference the new scripts in the manifest file.
