NEW QUESTION: 1Which NetScaler mode is commonly referred to as 'inline mode'?A. Use Source IP (USIP)B. One-Arm ModeC. Two-Arm ModeD. MAC-based ForwardingAnswer: C

NEW QUESTION: 2Which of the following is the MOST important guideline when using software to scan for security exposures within a corporate network?A. Never use open source toolsB. Focus only on production serversC. Do not interrupt production processesD. Follow a linear process for attacksAnswer: C*Explanation:ExplanationThe first rule of scanning for security exposures is to not break anything. This includes the interruption of any running processes. Open source tools are an excellent resource for performing scans. Scans should focus on both the test and production environments since, if compromised, the test environment could be used as a platform from which to attack production servers. Finally, the process of scanning for exposures is more of a spiral process than a linear process.
