NEW QUESTION: 1 Which of the following answers presents the MOST significant threat to network based IDS or IPS systems?
A. Complex IDS/IPS Signature Syntax
B. Encrypted Traffic
C. Digitally Signed Network Packets
D. Segregated VLANs
Answer: B
Explanation: Discussion: Encrypted network packets present the biggest threat to an effective IDS/IPS plan because the network cannot easily (Or quickly) be decoded and examined. Encrypted packets can't be examined by the IDS to determine if there is a threat there so in most cases the traffic is just forwarded along with the potential threat. There is an industry where a company provides examination services for your network traffic, acting like a proxy server for all your network traffic. You simply send them copies of your certificates so they can decode the traffic. This is common in the financial industry where violating federal law or being sued by federal investigators for insider trading can lead to business collapse. The external company examines all the network traffic coming and going from your network for potential liabilities. The following answers are incorrect:
- Complex IDS/IPS Signature syntax: IDS/IPS signatures can be complex but this isn't the MOST significant threat to the functionality of an IDS/IPS system.
- Digitally Signed Network Packets: This is an incorrect answer because it isn't a threat to IDS/IPS systems looking for dangerous network traffic. Foremost because we don't commonly digitally sign each network packet we send.
- Segregated VLANs: This is not a correct answer but VLANs can present barriers to IDS/IPS systems spotting dangerous traffic. There is an easy solution to VLANs and IDS/IPS systems and that would be simply placing an IDS/IPS sensor on that VLAN and set it up to send its traffic to the IDS/IPS management system.
