NEW QUESTION: 3Which steps are used to create or modify a process by combining plugin steps?A. Select the process, then define or edit it using the Edit tab of the Process user interface.B. Select a component, then define or edit its process using the Workflow tab of the Component user interfaceC. Select a component, then define or edit its process using the Process tab of the Component user interface.D. Select the process, then define or edit it using the Design tab of the Process user interfaceAnswer: D*Explanation:Explanation/Reference:In the process editor you organize the steps in a process, specify their properties, and connect them to each other.By combining automation plug-in steps in the process editor, you can create fully automated deployment processes. When you create a process, you drag steps onto the design area and define the properties as you go. Property values can be specified when you define the process or at run time. The process flow is defined by drawing connections between steps. The following illustration, shows a series of automation- type plug-in steps and the connections between them.Note: A component process is a series of user-defined steps that operate on a component's artifacts.Each component has at least one process and can have several. Component processes are created with the process editor. The process editor is a visual drag-and-drop editor that enables you to drag process steps onto the design space and configure them as you go. Process steps are selected from a menu of standard steps.References: http://www.ibm.com/support/knowledgecenter/SS4GSP_6.1.3/com.ibm.udeploy.reference.doc/topics/plugin_ch.html
