NEW QUESTION: 2According to the FASB conceptual framework, the quality of information that helps users increase the likelihood of correctly forecasting the outcome of past or present events is called:A. Reliability.B. Predictive value.C. Representational faithfulness.D. Feedback value.Answer: BExplanation:Choice "b" is correct. The quality of information that helps users increase the likelihood of correctly forecasting the outcome of past or present events is called predictive value. Forecasting is predicting.Choice "a" is incorrect. The quality of information that helps users increase the likelihood of correctly forecasting the outcome of past or present events is called predictive value, not feedback value.Feedback value enables decision makers to confirm prior expectations or to adjust or correct the decisions made previously. Choice "c" is incorrect. The quality of information that helps users increase the likelihood of correctly forecasting the outcome of past or present events is called predictive value, not representational faithfulness. Representational faithfulness is the agreement between financial reporting and the resources or events represented. Choice "d" is incorrect. The quality of information that helps users increase the likelihood of correctly forecasting the outcome of past or present events is called predictive value, not reliability. Reliability is the combination of neutrality, representational faithfulness, and verifiability.
