NEW QUESTION: 2The fossil remain of the first flying vertebrates, the pterosaurs, have intrigued paleontologists for morethan two centuries. How such large creatures, which weighed in some cases as much as a pilotedhangglider and had wingspans from 8 to 12 meters, solved the problems of powered flight, and exactlywhat these creatures were-reptiles or birds-are among the questions scientist have puzzled over.Perhaps the least controversial assertion about the pterosaurs is that they were reptiles. Their skulls,pelvises, and hind feet are reptilian. The anatomy of their wings suggests that they did not evolve into theclass of birds. In pterosaurs a greatly elongated fourth finger of each forelimb supported a wing likemembrane. The other fingers were short and reptilian, with sharp claws, in birds the second finger is the principle strut of the wing, which consists primarily of features. If the pterosaur walked or remainedstationary, the fourth finger, and with it the wing, could only turn upward in an extended inverted V-shapealong side of the animal's body. The pterosaurs resembled both birds and bats in their overall structureand proportions. This is not surprising because the design of any flying vertebrate is subject toaerodynamic constraints. Both the pterosaurs and the birds have hollow bones, a feature that representsa saving in weight. In the birds, however, these bones are reinforced more massively by internal struts.Although scales typically cover reptiles, the pterosaurs probably had hairy coats. T.H. Huxley reasonedthat flying vertebrates must have been warm blooded because flying implies a high internal temperature.Huxley speculated that a coat of hair would insulate against loss of body heat and might streamline thebody to reduce drag in flight. The recent discovery of a pterosaur specimen covered in long, dense, andrelatively thick hairlike fossil material was the first clear evidenced that his reasoning was correct.Efforts to explain how the pterosaurs became air-borne have led to suggestions that they launched themselves by jumping from cliffs, by dropping from trees, or even by rising into light winds from the crests of waves. Each hypothesis has its difficulties. The first wrongly assumes that the pterosaur's hind feet resembled a bat's and could serve as hooks by which the animal could hang in preparation for flight. The second hypothesis seems unlikely because large pterosaurs could not have landed in trees without damaging their wings. The birds call for high waves to channels updrafts. The wind that made such waves however, might have been too strong for the pterosaurs to control their flight once airborne. The author states that the mitigating effect of social programs involving income transfers on the income level of low-income people is often not felt by
