NEW QUESTION: 3 Four HP 3800 Series Switches have formed a backplane stack in a ring topology. Member 1 is the commander the two stacking links on the member 1 fail. What happens?A. If LACP Multi-Active Detection (MAD) is enabled and the stack connects to a ProVision switch on a link aggregation, member 2, 3 and 4 and shutdown the ports Otherwise, no ports are disabledB. If the switch policy is one-fragment-up members 2, 3, and 4 shut down all of their portsC. If LACP Multi-Active Detection (MAD) is enabled member 1 shuts down all of its ports. Otherwise, no ports are disabledD. If the split policy is one-fragment-up member 1 shuts down all of its portsAnswer: DExplanation:Results of Disconnecting a Stacking Cable If a stacking cable becomes disconnected from one of the switches in the stack, the effect depends on the stacking topology that is being used:Mesh-The stack topology is temporarily changed to a ring. To recover, simply reconnect the stacking cable; the mesh topology and the previous stack configuration is restored.Ring-There is little effect. The stack topology is temporarily changed to a chain topology. To recover, simply reconnect the stacking cable; the ring topology and the previous stack configuration is restored.Chain-The following occurs:The smaller section (fragment) of the stack that results from the disconnection becomes Inactive (the Stack Status value shown in the output of the show stacking command is Inactive).If the two resulting fragments are the same size, the fragment that contains theCommander will be Active, and the other fragment becomes Inactive.Both fragments will have a Commander and a Standby selected (if there is more than oneswitch in each fragment).When the stacking cable is reconnected to reform the chain:-The Commander and Standby of the Active fragment retain those roles for the resultingstack. If the original Commander was not in that fragment, then the stack will have a newCommander when the stack is reformed.-The switches in the Inactive fragment reboot and assume their new roles in the reformedchain.Stack fragment - A stack that previously had more members (that is, some of itsprevious members are now missing). The fragment canbe Active or Inactive based on the rules described.Active Stack fragment - When a stack becomes fragmented, only one fragment remainsActive; the other fragments become Inactive(all network ports are disabled). The active stack fragment inherits the MAC address and IPaddressing of the stack for management. Thefragment that has more switches in it will be the Active fragment. This allows more of thenetwork ports to remain operational. If the fragments have the same number of switches inthem, then the fragment that has the original Commander will be the Active fragment.Inactive Stack fragment - The switches in this fragment do not actively switch packets.They are powered on, however, the networkceases to carry traffic. All user ports are disabled. Only the OOBM and stack ports remainactive.
