NEW QUESTION: 1 Using a heuristic system to detect an anomaly in a computer's baseline, a system administrator was able to detect an attack even though the company signature based IDS and antivirus did not detect it. Further analysis revealed that the attacker had downloaded an executable file onto the company PC from the USB port, and executed it to trigger a privilege escalation flaw. Which of the following attacks has MOST likely occurred? A. Zero-day B. XML injection C. Cookie stealing D. Directory traversal Answer: A Explanation: The vulnerability was unknown in that the IDS and antivirus did not detect it. This is zero day vulnerability. A zero day vulnerability refers to a hole in software that is unknown to the vendor. This security hole is then exploited by hackers before the vendor becomes aware and hurries to fix it - this exploit is called a zero day attack. Uses of zero day attacks can include infiltrating malware, spyware or allowing unwanted access to user information. The term "zero day" refers to the unknown nature of the hole to those outside of the hackers, specifically, the developers. Once the vulnerability becomes known, a race begins for the developer, who must protect users.

NEW QUESTION: 2 A merchant acquirer has the need to store credit card numbers in a transactional database in a high performance environment. Which of the following BEST protects the credit card data? A. Data loss prevention system B. Database field encryption C. Full disk encryption D. File-level encryption Answer: B Explanation: Database encryption makes use of cryptography functions that are built into the database software to encrypt the data stored in the data base. This often offers granular encryption options which allows for the encryptions of the entire database, specific database tables, or specific database fields, such as a credit card number field. Incorrect Answers: B. File-level encryption would involve encrypting the entire database file. This would mean that accessing any data in the database would involve the overhead of decrypting the data. C. A data loss prevention system is a system designed to detect a potential data breach. It is not used to encrypt data. D. Full disk encryption would involve encrypting the entire hard disk. This would mean that accessing any data in the hard disk would involve the overhead of decrypting the data. References:

NEW QUESTION: 3 What is the primary drawback to using advanced encryption standard (AES) algorithm with a 256 bit key to share sensitive data? A. It has been proven to be a weak cipher; therefore, should not be trusted to protect sensitive data. B. To get messaging programs to function with this algorithm requires complex configurations. C. It is a symmetric key algorithm, meaning each recipient must receive the key through a different channel than the message. D. Due to the key size, the time it will take to encrypt and decrypt the message hinders efficient communication.Answer: C

NEW QUESTION: 4A mobile audio streaming service tracks the listening habits of its users via an analytics platform. It wants to enrich that data with third-party demographics data to better understand the users who use its platform. Which approach should an architect select to meet the requirements?A. Share customer email and preferences with record companies and request related demographicsB. Include a login in the application and onboard third-party data via an onboarding partnerC. Include a login in the application, and share email and location with demographic data scraping companyD. Share customer name and listening habits with media company partners and request customer demographicsAnswer: C
