Configure a stand-alone root certification authority (CA).C. Deploy two servers that run Windows Server 2008 R2 Enterprise Edition. Configure a failover cluster. Configure an enterprise certification authority (CA).D. Deploy two servers that run Windows Server 2008 Enterprise Edition. Configure an enterprise root certification authority (CA) and a stand-alone subordinate CA.Answer: C*Explanation:Explanation/Reference: To deploy Certificate Services on the network and ensure that the server services are available if a single server fails, you need to deploy two servers that run Windows Server 2008 Enterprise Edition because Enterprise Edition of Windows Server 2008 should be used to configure failover clustering.You need to deploy two servers to configure a failover cluster. You need to then configure a failover cluster, so that the server services are available if a single server fails. Finally you need to configure an enterprise certification authority (CA). You should use Enterprise CA because you need to use certificates in the internal network and not in the external world.Reference: Certificate Server / Enterprise CA
