If the bond is priced to yield 8.8%, it is selling: A. at its maturity value. B. at par. C. at a discount. D. at a premium. Answer: C Explanation: If the bond is priced to yield 8.8%, it is selling at a discount. Its nominal yield is the same as its coupon rate, 8%, which is what it would yield if it were selling at its par value, which is the same as its maturity value and its face value--$1,000. In order to be yielding more than this, the bond has to be selling for less than its face value, such that investors are also getting a return from capital gains. A bond that is selling below its face value is said to be selling at a discount.
