NEW QUESTION: 1 Which access control method allows the data owner (the person who created the file) to control access to the information they own? A. DAC - Discretionary Access Control B. RBAC - Role-Based Access Control C. MAC - Mandatory Access Control D. NDAC - Non-Discretionary Access Control Answer: A
Explanation: DAC - Discretionary Access Control is where the user controls access to the data they create or manage. It is the least secure method of access control because of a few factors: -Employee changeover can lead to confusion of data ownership or abandoned data. -Employees are not traditionally experienced enough to manage data permissions and maintain them in a reliable fashion. -People in general are the least reliable component of any organization The following answers are incorrect: -MAC - Mandatory Access Control: This is incorrect because in the MAC model of access control, labels are used to identify the level of sensitivity of the data. If the user does not have privileges to such data he or she is denied access. -RBAC - Role-Based Access Control: Sorry, RBAC is Role-Based Access Control where the users' Role determines the access level to data they are given. -NDAC - Non-Discretionary Access Control: Sorry, this isn't a common term associated with access control methodologies.
