NEW QUESTION: 1 Which of the following represents a relation, which is the basis of a relational database? A. Two-dimensional table B. One-dimensional table C. Four-dimensional table D. Three-dimensional table Answer: A
Explanation: The relational model is based on set theory and predicate logic and provide a high level of abstraction. The use of set theory allows data to be structured in a series of table that have columns representing the variables and rows that contain specific instances of data. Source: Page 605, OIG 2007 The representation in columns and rows represents the two dimensional table. A relation is the basis of a relational database and is represented by a two dimensional table.
