NEW QUESTION: 4Create a persistent volume with nameapp-data, of capacity2Giandaccess modeReadWriteMany. Thetype of volume ishostPathand itslocation is/srv/app-data.Answer:
Explanation:See the solution below.ExplanationsolutionPersistent VolumeA persistent volume is a piece of storage in aKubernetes cluster. PersistentVolumes are a cluster-level resource like nodes, which don't belong to any namespace. It is provisioned by the administrator and has a particular file size. This way, a developer deploying their app on Kubernetes need not know the underlying infrastructure. When the developer needs a certain amount of persistent storage for their application, the system administrator configures the cluster so that they consume the PersistentVolume provisioned in an easy way. Creating PersistentVolume kind: PersistentVolume apiVersion: v1 metadata: name: app-data spec: capacity: # defines the capacity of PV we are creating storage: 2Gi # the amount of storage we are trying to claim accessModes: # defines the rights of the volume we are creating - ReadWriteMany hostPath: path: "/srv/app-data" # path to which we are creating the volume Challenge* Create a Persistent Volume named ReadWriteMany, storage class name shared, 2Gi of storage capacity and the host path /srv/app-data. Save the file and create the persistent volume. Image for post 3. View the persistent volume. * Our persistent volume status is available meaning it is available and it has not been mounted yet. This status will change when we mount the persistent volume to a persistent volume claim.

Challenge* In a real ecosystem, a system admin will create the Persistent Volume then a developer will create a Persistent Volume Claim which will be referenced in a pod. A Persistent Volume Claim is created by specifying the minimum size and the access mode they require from the persistent volume.

Challenge* Create a Persistent Volume Claim that requests the Persistent Volume we had created above. The claim should request 2Gi. Ensure that the Persistent Volume Claim has the same storageClassName as the persistent volume you had previously created.

```
kind: PersistentVolume
apiVersion: v1
metadata:
  name: spec:
  accessModes:
  - ReadWriteMany
resources:
  requests:
    storage: 2Gi
storageClassName: shared2. Save and create the pvc
```

```
jqerry191@cloudshell:~(extreme-clone-2654111)$ kubectl create -f app-data.yaml persistentvolumeclaim/app-data created

3. View the pv Image for post 4. Let's see what has changed in the pv we had initially created. Image for post Our status has now changed from available to bound.

5. Create a new pod named myapp with image nginx that will be used to mount the Persistent Volume Claim with the path /var/app/config. Mounting a Claim

apiVersion: v1
kind: Pod
metadata:
  creationTimestamp: null
  name: app-data
spec:
  volumes:
  - name: config
    persistentVolumeClaim:
      claimName: app-data
containers:
  - image: nginx
    name: app
    volumeMounts:
  - mountPath: "
```
