NEW QUESTION: 2 While debugging a backend application for an IoT system that supports globally distributed devices a Solutions Architect notices that stale data is occasionally being sent to user devices. Devices often share data, and stale data does not cause issues in most cases However device operations are disrupted when a device reads the stale data after an update The global system has multiple identical application stacks deployed In different AWS Regions If a user device travels out of its home geographic region it will always connect to the geographically closest AWS Region to write or read data The same data is available in all supported AWS Regions using an Amazon DynamoDB global table What change should be made to avoid causing disruptions in device operations? A. Update the backend to use strongly consistent reads. Update the devices to always write to and read from their home AWS Region B. Enable strong consistency globally on a DynamoDB global table Update the backend to use strongly consistent reads C. Switch the backend data store to Amazon Aurora MySQL with cross-region replicas Update the backend to always write to the master endpoint D. Select one AWS Region as a master and perform all writes in that AWS Region only Update the backend to use strongly consistent reads Answer: A Explanation: https://docs.aws.amazon.com/amazondynamodb/latest/developerguide/V2globaltables_HowItWorks.html " An application can read and write data to any replica table. If your application only uses eventually consistent reads and only issues reads against one AWS Region, it will work without any modification. However, if your application requires strongly consistent reads, it must perform all of its strongly consistent reads and writes in the same Region. DynamoDB does not support strongly consistent reads across Regions. Therefore, if you write to one Region and read from another Region, the read response might include stale data that doesn't reflect the results of recently completed writes in the other Region. If applications update the same item in different Regions at about the same time, conflicts can arise. To help ensure eventual consistency, DynamoDB global tables use a last writer wins reconciliation between concurrent updates, in which DynamoDB makes a best effort to determine the last writer. With this conflict resolution mechanism, all the replicas will agree on the latest update and converge toward a state in which they all have identical data. "
