NEW QUESTION: 2 The networking team has created a VPC in an AWS account. The application team has asked for access to resources in another VPC in the same AWS account. The SysOps Administrator has created the VPC peering connection between both the accounts, but the resources in one VPC cannot communicate with the resources in the other VPC. What could be causing this issue?
A. The route tables have not been updated.
B. One of the VPCs is not sized correctly for peering.
C. One VPC has disabled the peering flag.
D. There is no public subnet in one of the VPCs.
Answer: A
Explanation:

<https://aws.amazon.com/premiumsupport/knowledge-center/vpc-peering-connectivity/> VPC peering network connectivity failures are typically the result of incorrect or missing route tables or firewall rules. VPCs in a peering connection must be able to communicate with each other as if they are within the same network to route traffic between them using private IP addresses.
