NEW QUESTION: 3Which four actions are possible during an Online Data file Move operation?A. Querying tables in the data file being movedB. Creating and dropping tables in the data file being movedC. Performing Block Media Recovery for a data block in the data file being movedD. Flashing back the databaseE. Performing file shrink of the data file being movedF. Executing DML statements on objects stored in the data file being movedAnswer: A,B,D,FExplanation: Incorrect:Not B:The online move data file operation may get aborted if the standby recovery processtakes the data file offline, shrinks the file(not B), or drops the tablespace.Not D:The online move data file operation cannot be executed on physical standby whilestandby recovery is running in a mounted but not open instance.Note:You can move the location of an online data file from one physical file to another physicalfile while the database is actively accessing the file. To do so, you use the SQL statementALTER DATABASE MOVE DATAFILE.An operation performed with the ALTER DATABASE MOVE DATAFILE statementincreases the availability of the database because it does not require that the database beshut down to move the location of an online data file. In releases prior to Oracle Database12c Release 1 (12.1), you could only move the location of an online data file if the databasewas down or not open, or by first taking the file offline.You can perform an online move data file operation independently on the primary and on the standby (either physical or logical). The standby is not affected when a data file is moved on the primary, and vice versa. Reference: Oracle Data Guard Concepts and Administration 12c, Moving the Location of Online Data Files
