NEW QUESTION: 1 Which of the following temporary differences ordinarily results in a future tax liability?
A. Depreciation of equipment
B. Subscription revenue collected in advance
C. Accrued warranty costs
Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 2 You manage a SQL Server 2008 server that hosts a database named Sales. Unauthorized modifications to some tables within the Sales database have resulted in some views no longer working. You need to implement a method that will ensure that all modifications to any objects with the Sales database are logged. What should you do?
A. Create a DML trigger with server scope.
B. Create a DML trigger with database scope.
C. Create a DDL trigger with database scope.
D. Create a DDL trigger with server scope.
Answer: C
Explanation: A Database Definition Language (DDL) trigger with database scope can be used to audit all DDL statements on any database objects. A DDL statement (such as CREATE, ALTER, and drop) is used to create, alter, or drop (remove or delete) objects within the database. Once the event is captured, the DDL trigger can be programmed to log events, or if desired, even roll back unauthorized events. Answer D is incorrect. A Database Definition Language (DDL) trigger with server scope can be used to audit all DDL statements at the server level, such as the creation, modification, or deletion of a database. However, DDL triggers at the server level will not capture DDL statements executed on objects within a database. Answer B and C are incorrect. Data Manipulation Language (DML) statements (such as UPDATE, INSERT, or DELETE) are used to update, insert, or delete data within a database. A DML trigger will not capture modifications to the objects. Further, DML triggers would be created with database scope since it works on data within a database.
