NEW QUESTION: 2A System Administrator want to configure an XGS so that only when the SQL_Injection security event is enabled in the IPS policy and triggered, the XGS performs a packet capture of the complete connection from the point of the event triggering. How should the System Administrator configure the XGS?A. Create a Network Access policy object with a capture connection response object for the SQL_Injection security event.B. Create an IPS Filter Policy object for the SQL_Injection security event and apply a response to capture the connection.C. Edit the SQL_Injection security event within the IPS policy and apply a response to capture the connection.D. Edit the IPS object that contains the SQL_Injection security event and apply a response to capture the connection.Answer: BExplanation:Explanation/Reference: You can configure the IPS Event Filter policy to tune the Threat (Severity) Level and responses for a specific Intrusion Prevention Policy rule (security events/signature). Incorrect Answers:C: IPS event filters offer you the ability to change settings for a single or for a group of security events without having to create new Network Access policies or Intrusion Prevention policies. The IPS Event Filter policy is similar to the Network Access Policy in that it is a single entity that you add rules to.
