NEW QUESTION: 1A. longitude;latitude;minDistanceB. nameC.

longitude;latitude;dateLastClaimedD. IdAnswer: AExplanation:Topic 1, LitWare, Inc

BackgroundYou are a developer for LitWare, Inc., a game development company. You are developing a backend service for an online social gaming platform named GamerData. The game is built around point generators, which are associated with physical landmarks. Players claim point generators which give them a set amount of points per day.Business Requirements Mobile AppThe game itself runs on various mobile devices and is developed by TailSpin Toys, a company that specializes in mobile game development. The mobile app will periodically make calls to the GamerData service to find the five closest point generators that are located less than the specified distance from the player's current location. If no point generators are found, the search distance increases until one is found.The mobile app shows all the point generators owned by each player. The mobile app allows for each player to search for claimed point generators by player name. This search does not require exact spelling of names. The details for each claimed generator is shown in the app.When a player claims a point generator, they should receive an email notification. An Azure Function named EmailPlayer has been developed to email players with details about recently claimed point generators.SponsorsThe platform allows business to sponsor point generators within a business location.ReportsA report named Daily Sponsor Report must be generated each day at midnight. The report must contain a section for each sponsor. Each sponsor section must contain two subsections.The first subsection of the report contains the names of the point generators for that sponsor, ordered by the last time the point generator was claimed. The second subsection contains the current owners for each of the point generators for the sponsor. Generation of reports must not impact the GamerData service.Technical RequirementsGamerData ServiceAll data for the GamerData service is stored in an Azure DocumentDB instance named GamerData.Business and players interact with the service by using a REST API.The REST API must:* Produce valid Swagger API specifications for non-obsolete actions.* Be optimized for loading specific point generators.* Follow REST best practices.* Include appropriate terms of service.Costs for all Azure services must be minimized.Build and DeploymentThe GamerData service will be deployed to Azure in a private VNet.SecuritySponsors have accounts in an Azure Active Directory (Azure AD) with business-to-consumer (B2C) enabled named litwaregamerdata.onmicrosoft.com managed by Litware, Inc. for both GamerData and LitWare, Inc. services.Only Litware, Inc. developers and automated testing tools should be able to directly access the GamerData service. All other use of the service must be through Azure API Management. A description of the security practices used during development, available on Microsoft SharePoint, must be available to users of the API under the terms of service.Reporting Azure Search will be used as the source for running reports. The properties of indexes in Azure

Search must match the names of the properties in DocumentDB.PerformanceThe Azure DocumentDB must not be used for reporting purposes. All services must perform queries in the data store when possible.Application StructureStartup.csRelevant portions of the app files are shown below.
