NEW QUESTION: 1While conducting a payroll audit, an internal auditor in a large government organization found inadequate segregation in the duties assigned to the assistant director of personnel. When the auditor explained the risk of fraud, the assistant director became upset, terminated the interview, and threatened to sue the organization for defamation of character if the audit engagement was not curtailed. The auditor discussed the situation with the chief audit executive (CAE). The CAE should then:A. Add additional testing to determine whether other indicators of fraud exist.B. Curtail the audit engagement to avoid potential legal action.C. Continue the original engagement program as planned but include a comment about the assistant director's reaction in the engagement final communication.D. Provide a report to senior management recommending a fraud investigation.Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 2An downstream relationship is a logical object or component that has a dependency on other items in a solution.A. FalseB. TrueAnswer: A*Explanation:In an upstream relationship, a logical object or component has a dependency on other items in the solution. For example, a service running on an application server requires an Active Directory user account to be authenticated. The application service must be started after the Active Directory service. Therefore, the application server has an upstream relationship with the Active Directory service. In an downstream relationship, a logical object or component does not have a dependency on other items in the solution. For example, say that a multisite web server crashes. The web tier hosting multiple websites will crash; however, the downstream objects such as the database server will continue to function. Backend processes that are dependent on the downstream objects from the web servers can continue to function.
