NEW QUESTION: 4A security architect has been engaged during the implementation stage of the SDLC to review a new HR software installation for security gaps. With the project under a tight schedule to meet market commitments on project delivery, which of the following security activities should be prioritized by the security architect? (Select TWO).A. Perform penetration testing over the HR solution to identify technical vulnerabilitiesB. Secure code review of the HR solution to identify security gaps that could be exploitedC. Perform access control testing to ensure that privileges have been configured correctlyD. Determine if the information security standards have been complied with by the projectE. Perform a security risk assessment with recommended solutions to close off high-rated risks Answer: D,E Explanation: In this question, we are pushed for time to get the project completed. Therefore, we have to prioritize our security testing as we do not have time to fully test everything. One of the priorities from a security perspective should be to perform a security risk assessment with recommended solutions to close off high-rated risks. This is to test for the most potentially damaging risks and to remediate them. The other priority is to determine if the information security standards have been complied with by the project. Security of information/data is the most important aspect of security. Loss of data can be very damaging for a company in terms of liability and litigation.
