NEW QUESTION: 3 A bank has two drive-in lanes to serve customers: The technique used in analyzing the problem is best described as: A. Linear programming B. Integrated autoregressive-moving average (ARIMA) modeling C. Simulation theory D. Differential calculus. Answer: C
Explanation: Answer (A) is correct. Simulation is a technique for experimenting with logical/mathematical models using a computer. Despite the power of mathematics, many problems cannot be solved by known analytical methods because of the behavior of the variables and the complexity of their interactions. However, the performance of a quantitative model under uncertainty may be investigated by randomly selecting values for each of the variables in the model (based on the probability distribution of each variable) and then calculating the value of the solution. If this process is performed a large number of times, the distribution of results from the model will be obtained.
