NEW QUESTION: 2 For the following protocols, which one provides a mechanism to transparently intercept andredirect CIFS traffic from a client to a local Cisco Wide Area Application engine?A. File Transport Protocol (FTP)B. Web Cache Communication Protocol (WCCP)C. Virtual Router Redundancy Protocol (VRRP)D. Hot Standby Routing Protocol (HSRP)
Answer: B Explanation:Explanation Web Cache Control Protocol Description The Web Cache Control Protocol (WCCP) feature allows you to use a Cisco Cache Engine to handle web traffic, thus reducing transmission costs and downloading time. This traffic includes user requests to view pages and graphics on World Wide Web servers, whether internal or external to your network, and the replies to those requests. shows a sample WCCP network configuration.Figure 1 Sample Cisco Cache Engine Network ConfigurationWhen a user (client) requests a page from a web server (located in the Internet, in this case), the router sends the request to a Cisco Cache Engine (Cache 1, Cache 2, or Cache 3). If the cache engine has a copy of the requested page in storage, the engine sends the user that page. Otherwise, the engine gets the requested page and the objects on that page from the web server, stores a copy of the page and its objects (caches them), and forwards the page and objects to the user.WCCP transparently redirects HTTP requests from the intended server to a Cisco Cache Engine. End users do not know that the page came from the cache engine rather than the originally requested web server. The Using the Cisco Cache Engine publication contains detailed information about the Cisco Cache Engine and discusses alternative network configurations.Reference http://www.cisco.com/en/US/docs/ios/11_2/feature/guide/wccp.html#wp2040
