Explanation: The strings are not the same objects so the == comparison fails. See note #1 below. As the value of the strings are the same equals is true. The equals method compares values for equality. Note: #1 == Compares references, not values. The use of == with object references is generally limited to the following: Comparing to see if a reference is null. Comparing two enum values. This works because there is only one object for each enum constant. You want to know if two references are to the same object.

NEW QUESTION: 4 Given: String originalPath = "data\projects\a-project\..\..\another-project"; Path path = Paths.get(originalPath); System.out.print(path.normalize()); What is the result? A. dataprojectsa-projectanother-project B. data\projects\a-project\..\..\another-project C. dataprojectsa-project....another-project D. dataanother-project Answer: C Explanation:
