On the central computer, configure a custom task in the Forwarded Events log.D. On a computer, configure a custom view to display the application errors. Configure a custom task for the application error events.Answer: C*Explanation:Event ForwardingEvent forwarding enables you to transfer events that match specific criteria to an administrative (or collector) computer. This enables you to manage events centrally. A single event log on the collector computer holds important events from computers anywhere in your organization. You do not need to connect to the local event logs on individual computers. Subscriptions

In a source-initiated subscription (sometimes termed a source computer-initiated subscription), the computer on which an event is generated (the source computer) sends the event to the collector computer. You would use a source-initiated subscription when you have a large number of source computers and you configure these computers through Group Policy.
