NEW QUESTION: 4 A company has an Active Directory Domain Services (AD DS) domain with Windows 8.1 client computers. You need to minimize the amount of Trusted Platform Module (TPM) authorization information that is stored in the registry. What should you do?
A. Create a Group Policy object (GPO) that disables the Configure the level of TPM owner authorization information available to operating system policy setting. B. Create a Group Policy object (GPO) that sets the Configure the level of TPM owner authorization information available to operating system policy setting to None. C. Create a Group Policy object (GPO) that enables the Turn on TPM Local Encryption policy setting. D. Enable Platform Configuration Register indices (PCRs) 0, 2, 4, and 11 for the Configure TPM validation profile for native UEFI firmware configuration policy setting. Answer: B Explanation:

http://technet.microsoft.com/en-us/library/jj679889.aspx#BKMK\_tpmgp\_oauthos Configure the level of TPM owner authorization information available to the operating system This policy setting configures how much of the TPM owner authorization information is stored in the registry of the local computer. Depending on the amount of TPM owner authorization information that is stored locally, the Windows operating system and TPM-based applications can perform certain actions in the TPM that require TPM owner authorization without requiring the user to enter the TPM owner password. There are three TPM owner authentication settings that are managed by the Windows operating system. You can choose a value of Full, Delegate, or None. Full - This setting stores the full TPM owner authorization, the TPM administrative delegation blob, and the TPM user delegation blob in the local registry. With this setting, you can use the TPM without requiring remote or external storage of the TPM owner authorization value. This setting is appropriate for scenarios that do not require you to reset the TPM anti-hammering logic or change the TPM owner authorization value. Some TPM-based applications may require that this setting is changed before features that depend on the TPM anti-hammering logic can be used. Delegated - This setting stores only the TPM administrative delegation blob and the TPM user delegation blob in the local registry. This setting is appropriate for use with TPM-based applications that depend on the TPM antihammering logic. When you use this setting, we recommend using external or remote storage for the full TPM owner authorization value-for example, backing up the value in Active Directory Domain Services (AD DS). None - This setting provides compatibility with previous operating systems and applications. You can also use it for scenarios when TPM owner authorization cannot be stored locally. Using this setting might cause issues with some TPM-based applications. Further Information: <http://technet.microsoft.com/en-us/library/cc770660.aspx> Active Directory Domain Services (AD DS) can be used to store Trusted Platform Module (TPM) recovery information. There is only one TPM owner password per computer; therefore, the hash of the TPM owner password is stored as an attribute of the computer object in AD DS. The attribute has the common name (CN) of ms-TPM-OwnerInformation.

http://www.group-policy.com/ref/policy/2859/Configure\_TPM\_platform\_validation\_profile Configure TPM platform validation profile This policy setting allows you to configure how the computer's Trusted Platform Module (TPM) security hardware secures the BitLocker encryption key. This policy setting does not apply if the computer does not have a compatible TPM or if BitLocker has already been turned on with TPM protection. If you enable this policy setting before turning on BitLocker, you can configure the boot components that the TPM will validate before unlocking access to the BitLocker-encrypted operating system drive. If any of these components change while BitLocker protection is in effect, the TPM will not release the encryption key to unlock the drive and the computer will instead display the BitLocker Recovery console and require that either the recovery password or recovery key be provided to unlock the drive. If you disable or do not configure this policy setting, the TPM uses the default platform validation profile or the platform validation profile specified by the setup script. A platform validation profile consists of a set of Platform Configuration Register (PCR) indices ranging from 0 to 23, The default platform validation profile secures the encryption key against changes to the Core Root of Trust of Measurement (CRTM), BIOS, and Platform Extensions (PCR 0), the Option ROM Code (PCR 2), the Master Boot Record (MBR) Code (PCR 4), the NTFS Boot Sector (PCR 8), the NTFS Boot Block (PCR 9), the Boot Manager (PCR 10), and the BitLocker Access Control (PCR 11). The descriptions of PCR settings for computers that use an Extensible Firmware Interface (EFI) are different than the PCR settings described for computers that use a standard BIOS. The BitLocker Drive Encryption Deployment Guide on Microsoft TechNet contains a complete list of PCR settings for both EFI and standard BIOS. Warning: Changing from the default platform validation profile affects the security and manageability of your computer. BitLocker's sensitivity to platform modifications (malicious or authorized) is increased or decreased depending upon inclusion or exclusion (respectively) of the PCRs.
