NEW QUESTION: 1A corporate environment includes Exchange Server 2010. Support technicians do not have access to email message status information. Support technicians must currently escalate user requests for email message status to Exchange Server administrators. You need to recommend a solution that allows support technicians to display email message status in the Exchange Control Panel (ECP).What should you recommend?A. Grant the support technicians Read access to the SMTP connectivity log files.B. Assign the support technicians to the Message Tracking role.C. Grant the support technicians Read access to the SMTP protocol log files.D. Assign the support technicians to the Records Management role.Answer: B
Explanation:The Message Tracking management role enables administrators to track messages in an organization. This management role is one of several built-in roles in the Role Based Access Control (RBAC) permissions model in Microsoft Exchange Server 2010. Management roles, which are assigned to one or more management role groups, management role assignment policies, users, or universal security groups (USG), act as a logical grouping of cmdlets or scripts that are combined to provide access to view or modify the configuration of Exchange 2010 components, such as mailboxes, transport rules, and recipients. If a cmdlet or script and its parameters, together called a management role entry, are included on a role, that cmdlet or script and its parameters can be run by those assigned the role. For more information about management roles and management role entries, see Understanding Management Roles.
