NEW QUESTION: 1 Your network contains an internal network and a perimeter network. The perimeter network contains an Exchange Server 2010 Edge Transport server.You need to recommend a remote management solution for the Edge Transport server that meets the following requirements:-All management traffic must be encrypted-The solution must allow remote administration from the internet network-The solution must support the use of the Exchange Management Console (EMC)What should you recommend?A. Windows Remote Management (WinRM) over SSLB. Remote Desktop Protocol (RDP) over Secure Socket Layer (SSL).C. Windows Management Instrumentation Command-line (WMIC)D. Lightweight Directory Access Protocol (LDAP) over Secure Socket Layer (SSL).Answer: AExplanation: Corrected from D to B The question is talking about EMC not EMStop five ways to avoid driving to the office in the middle of the night:1.Exchange Management Console The Exchange Management Console (EMC) is one method to manage your Exchange Server as it is now remote-capable. You essentially run a local version of EMC on your workstation and connect to a remote Exchange Server in order to manage it. It is important to note that a 64-bit host system is required, as that the EMC only runs on 64-bit system. In addition, for security reasons, only the Edge Transport server role appears for servers that have the Edge Transport server role installed - regardless of any other server roles that may be present.2.Remote Exchange Management Shell Exchange Server cmdlets can be remotely accessed via Exchange Manage Shell (EMS) using the PowerShell scripting language. This feature is new to Exchange Server 2010, and is powerful as it allows multiple servers to be managed as a single EMS instance from a remote workstation. The EMS is more powerful for certain tasks and also has the advantage of not being subjected to the requirement of a 64-bithost system. Organizations that have deployed Office 365 will be interested to know that EMS works with Exchange Online too. 3.Exchange Control Panel Also introduced in Exchange Server 2010, the Exchange Control Panel (ECP) allows an administrator to remotely configure specific aspects of Exchange Server with nothing more than a supported web browser. Accessed from the http://<servername>/ECP URL, ECP functions through the firewall and is similar to accessing the Outlook Web App. Mailboxes can be managed from the ECP, including distribution groups, contacts, as well as other objects such as journaling and transport rules. While not as comprehensive as some of the available other administrative options, it does at least make quick tweaks possible with a minimum of fuss.4.Remote Desktop Protocol RDP, or Remote Desktop Protocol, is one of the most common protocols for remote access to Exchange Server, as well as Windows Servers in general. RDP is popular as it is commonly understood, fast and generally considered to be a secure method for remote administration. There are two options to bear in mind here from a licensing perspective: Remote Desktop for Administration and Terminal Services. The first is limited to two connections and incurs no additional licensing costs. The latter has a greater amount of versatility, but has an added cost overhead.5.IP-based KVM IP-based KVM (Keyboard-Video-Mouse) appliances do not utilize made-in-Microsoft technologies. These are used to wire-up anything from a single server, to hundreds of them, by connecting to their video, keyboard and mouse ports for remote management over the LAN or Internet. One advantage of using an IP-based KVM solution would be that it is not limited to Exchange Servers, but can be used for general server maintenance tasks. Moreover, companies whose servers are located in hard-to-access server closets, or data center locations, may already have an IP-KVM in place for managing them.Old Comment:
