NEW QUESTION: 4 Three boys with autism, ages 7-10 years old, served as participants in a study. During baseline, staff used response blocking when five instances of aggression or head-banging occurred within 10 seconds, until attempts ceased for 1 minute. During baseline and treatment, each occurrence of aggression and head-banging was recorded daily and converted to the number of responses per hour. Treatment comprised a differential reinforcement of incompatible behavior (DRI) schedule coupled with response blocking after every head-banging or aggression. The staff initially applied the treatment to head-banging, while continuing to take a baseline on aggression.After noting treatment effects on head-banging, the staff then applied the treatment to aggression.In this scenario, how was direct replication shown?A. A baseline condition was implemented.B. The intervention was implemented in a staggered fashion across target behaviors after the initial baseline.C. A changing criterion design was used wherein the criterion for reinforcement was gradually changed over time.D. Baseline and intervention conditions were included.Answer: B
