Enable the Audit File System Group Policy setting for Success. F.

Enable the Audit File System Group Policy setting for Failure. Answer: B, C, D
Explanation: Security auditing allows you to track the effectiveness of your network defenses and identify attempts to circumvent them. There are a number of auditing enhancements in Windows Server 2008 R2 and Windows 7 that increase the level of detail in security auditing logs and simplify the deployment and management of auditing policies. Auditing policy Before you implement auditing policy, you must decide which event categories you want to audit. The auditing settings that you choose for the event categories define your auditing policy. On member servers and workstations that are joined to a domain, auditing settings for the event categories are undefined by default. On domain controllers, auditing is turned on by default. By defining auditing settings for specific event categories, you can create an auditing policy that suits the security needs of your organization. Audit Object Access This security setting determines whether to audit the event of a user accessing an object--for example, a file, folder, registry key, printer, and so forth--that has its own system access control list (SACL) specified. If you define this policy setting, you can specify whether to audit successes, audit failures, or not audit the event type at all. Success audits generate an audit entry when a user successfully accesses an object that has an appropriate SACL specified. Failure audits generate an audit entry when a user unsuccessfully attempts to access an object that has a SACL specified. To set this value to No auditing, in the Properties dialog box for this policy setting, select the Define these policy settings check box and clear the Success and Failure check boxes. Note that you can set a SACL on a file system object using the Security tab in that object's Properties dialog box.

<http://technet.microsoft.com/en-us/library/cc776774%28v=ws.10%29.aspx> Audit Handle Manipulation Group Policy setting This policy setting determines whether the operating system generates audit events when a handle to an object is opened or closed. Only objects with configured SACLs generate these events, and only if the attempted handle operation matches the SACL. Event volume can be high, depending on how SACLs are configured. When used together with the Audit File System or Audit Registry policy settings, the Audit Handle Manipulation policy setting can provide an administrator with useful "reason for access," audit data detailing the precise permissions on which the audit event is based. For example, if a file is configured as a read-only resource but a user attempts to save changes to the file, the audit event will log not just the event itself but the permissions that were used, or attempted to be used, to save the file changes. Global Object Access Auditing Group Policy setting. Global Object Access Auditing. In Windows Server 2008 R2 and Windows 7, administrators can define computer-wide system access control lists (SACLs) for either the file system or registry. The specified SACL is then automatically applied to every single object of that type. This can be useful both for verifying that all critical files, folders, and registry settings on a computer are protected, and for identifying when an issue with a system resource occurs.
