NEW QUESTION: 1How can failback of a recovered virtual machine in vSphere Replication be performed?A. No action required, because failback is automatically performed to the source site.B. Power off and unregister the virtual machine on the target site.C. Disable or Stop the virtual machine replication on the source site.D. Configure a new replication in the reverse machine at the target site.Answer: D*Explanation:Failback of Virtual Machines in vSphere ReplicationFailback of virtual machines is a manual task in a vSphere Replication.After performing a successful recovery from the primary site to the secondary site, you can perform failback. You manually configure a new replication in the reverse direction, that is, from the secondary site to the primary site. The disks of the primary site are used as replication seeds, so that vSphere Replication only synchronizes the changes made to the.vmdk files. Before you configure the reverse replication, you must manually unregister the virtual machine from the inventory on the primary site.

The solution must ensure that all values greater than 500 display a green icon.Solution: You create a measure, and then define a target value. Does this meet the goal? A. Yes B. No Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 4 What impact may 802.11w have on the efforts of rogue device containment with an overlay WIPS? A. 802.11w inadvertently exposes new methods for attacks to exploit TKIP countermeasure using spoofed management frames of legitimate stations. WIPS solutions are in capable of preventing this type of attack B. 802.11w introduces data integrity protection for some management and action frames, which may limits the methods used by WIPS to disconnect, and mitigate the impact of, rogue AP or client communications C. 802.11w introduces new mechanisms by which unassociated clients can refuse Deauthentication frames that can not be rejected by APs. This introduces new security concerns for WIPS containing Deauthentication attacks D. 802.11 introduces a mechanism to Encrypt MAC headers in management and control frames, which have traditionally have been used by WIPS to detect network threats such as hijacking attacks and MAC spoofing Answer: C Explanation: 802.11w allows the receiving STA to refuse disassociation when management frame protection (MFP) is negotiated and the message integrity check fails. Deauthentication frames can be sent by either an AP or a client station. Deauthentication frames can be sent by either an AP or a client station. Deauthentication is a notification, not a request. In the past, deauthentication could not be refused by the receiving station. 802.11w allows the receiving STA to refuse deauthentication when management frame protection is negotiated and the message integrity check fails. The 802.11w draft amendment defines a robust management frame as a management frame that can be protected by the management frame protection service. Pg 415
