An HR super user would like to create the jobs in one business group and be able to view them in the Job Definition form (Navigation: Work Structures > Job > Description) in the other business group. The user should also be able to assign the job to an employee in the other business group. How can this be done assuming the HR: Cross Business Group profile option is set to Yes?
A. When creating the job, click the 'Benchmark Job' to make the job available across business groups.
B. Job can be created under the Global Job Group so that the jobs created under the Global Job Groups are available across all business groups.
C. A Global Security Profile must be attached to the responsibility to be able to view jobs created in other business groups.
D. Create a Job Group as a Master Job Group so that the jobs created under the Global Job Groups are available across all business groups.
E. This functionality is not yet provided. Employees can be assigned only to the jobs created under the current business group.
Answer: D
Explanation:

Explanation/Reference: Explanation: In order to map jobs from one job group to another, a master job group must be defined. Master job groups are intermediate groupings only and cannot be used for other functional purposes. In Single Business Group Access mode, you can have one master job group for each business group and you can map jobs only within the same business group. In Cross Business Group Access mode, there is only one master job group, and you can map jobs across business groups
