Explanation:The payback period measures how quickly you recover your initial investment. The shorter this period, the greater the liquidity in terms of cash recovery. The payback rule ignores cash flows beyond the payback period. The discounted payback period is defined as the expected number of years that would be required to recover the original investment using discounted cash flows. Hence, (II) is true if there are no negative cash flows after the initial investment since discounting reduces the present value of the future cash flows.
