NEW QUESTION: 2 A 28-year-old woman was admitted to the hospital for a thyroidectomy. Postoperatively she is taken to the postanesthesia care unit for several hours. In preparing for the client's return to her room, which nursing measure best demonstrates the nurse's thorough understanding of possible postthyroidectomy complications?A. The nurse should instruct the client as soon as possible on alternative means of communication.B. Narcotics are readily available and administered when the client returns to her room to prevent excruciating pain.C. Dressings are placed at the bedside for dressing changes, which are to be done every 2 hours to best detect postoperative bleeding.D. A tracheostomy set, O₂, and suction are available at the bedside.Answer: D
Explanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:(A) Dressing changes are done as necessary for bleeding. However, frequently, post-thyroidectomy bleeding may not be visible on the dressing, but blood may drain down the back of the neck by gravity. (B) Narcotics are administered for acute pain as necessary. They are not necessarily given on return of the client to her room. (C) The most serious postthyroidectomy complication is ineffective airway and breathing pattern related to tracheal compression and edema. A tracheostomy set, O₂, and suction should be available at bedside for at least the first 24 hours postoperatively. (D) Impaired verbal communication may occur due to laryngeal edema or nerve damage, but most commonly, it occurs due to endotracheal intubation. The client is usually able to communicate but is hoarse.

review the communications management plan.B. The stakeholder engagement plan was not properly created.C. The former functional manager did not request to receive the report.D. The communications management plan was not properly revisedAnswer: D

NEW QUESTION: 4The default publisher on your system is:You want to update the Oracle Solaris 11 environment on your system,but you are not able to connect this system to the Internet to access the default Oracle repository. A repository has been created on your local network and is named `http://server1.example.com`.Which command would you choose to connect your system to the local repository?A. `pkg add-publisher` to add the new publisherB. `pkg set-publisher` to set the origin for the publisherC. `pkg set-publisher` to set the stickiness on the `http://server1.example.com` publisher and `unset stickiness` for `http://pkg.oracle.com/solaris/release`D. `pkg publisher` to specify the new publisherAnswer: B
Explanation:Solaris 11 Express makes it pretty easy to set up a local copy of the repository.A common reason folks need access to a local repository is because their system is not connected to the Internet.Tthe `pkg set-publisher` command can be used to for example add a publisher or to enable or disable a publisher.Note: Example Adding a PublisherUse the `-g` option to specify the publisher origin URI.
`pkg set-publisher -g http://pkg.example.com/release example.com`
Example Specifying the Preferred PublisherUse the `-P` option to specify a publisher as the preferred publisher. The specified publisher moves to the top of the search order. You can specify the `-P` option when you add a publisher or you can modify an existing publisher.
`pkg set-publisher -P example.com`
Example Enabling or Disabling a PublisherUse the `-d` option to disable a publisher. The preferred publisher cannot be disabled. A disabled publisher is not used in package operations such as `list` and `install`. You can modify the properties of a disabled publishers.Use the `-e` option to enable a publisher.
`pkg set-publisher -d example2.com`
