NEW QUESTION: 1 A solution architect is evaluating the reliability of a recently migrated application running on AWS. The front end is hosted on Amazon S3 and accelerated by Amazon CloudFront. The application layer running in a stateless Docker container on an Amazon EC2 On-Demand instance with an Elastic IP address. The storage layer is a MongoDB database running on an EC2 Reserved instance in the same Availability Zone as the application layer. Which combination of steps should the solution architect take to eliminate single points of failure with minimal application code changes? (Select Two)A. Migrate the storage layer to Amazon DynamoDBB. Create an Application Load Balancer and migrate the Docker container to AWS FargateC. Migrate the storage layer to Amazon DocumentDB (With MongoDB compatibility)D. Create a REST API in Amazon API-Gateway and use AWS Lambda functions as the application layerE. Create an Application Load Balancer and move the storage layer to an EC2 Auto Scaling group.Answer: B,CExplanation:

NEW QUESTION: 3 Kandy Miller is undecided between purchasing the four period bond or a series of one period bonds. Given the forward rates and spot rates provided below, what would Kandy earn on the four period spot rate bond? Spot Rates and Six Month Forward Rates (Annualized Rates on a Bond Equivalent Basis)A. 3.6289B. 5.2592C. 6.0481Answer: B

Explanation: While this looks like a "bootstrapping" problem, it is actually much easier. The spot rate is nothing more than all of the forward rates multiplied together taken to the nth root. While the calculation is simpler than the bootstrapping problem, there are still a few areas which trap some candidates. For example, each spot rate is annualized and needs to be divided by two to get the effective period rate. And, equally important, after all of the forward rates have been multiplied by each other (being sure to add "1" to each rate before multiplying) it is important to take the nth root (depending on the number of periods) and to subtract "1" afterwards. The detailed calculation is shown below: $((((1+0.047779/2)^3 \times (1+0.0671/2))^{1/4}) - 1) \times 2 = 0.052592$. (Note: If the candidate would prefer to see the number in "percentage" form it is necessary to multiply by "200" rather than by "2")
