NEW QUESTION: 3Which statement correctly describes the disabling of IP TTL propagation in an MPLS network?A. The TTL field of the IP packet is set to 0.B. The TTL field from the IP packet is copied into the TTL field of the MPLS label header at the ingress edge LSR.C. TTL propagation is only disabled on the ingress edge LSR,D. TTL propagation cannot be disabled in an MPLS domain.E. The TTL field of the MPLS label header is set to 255.Answer: E*Explanation: Explanation Time-to-Live (TTL) is an 8-bit field in the MPLS label header which has the same function in loop detection of the IP TTL field. Recall that the TTL value is an integer from 0 to 255 that is decremented by one every time the packet transits a router. If the TTL value of an IP packet becomes zero, the router discards the IP packet, and an ICMP message stating that the TTL expired in transit is sent to the source IP address of the IP packet. This mechanism prevents an IP packet from being routed continuously in case of a routing loop.By default, the TTL propagation is enabled so a user can use traceroute command to view all ofthe hops in the network.We can disable MPLS TTL propagation with the no mpls ip propagate-ttl command under globalconfiguration.When entering a label-switched path (LSP), the edge router will use a fixed TTL value (255) for thefirst label.This increases the security of your MPLS network by hiding provider network from customers.
