NEW QUESTION: 2 A Cisco Unified Wireless Network has an access point (AP) that provides a single point of management and reduces the security concern of a stolen access point. Which type of access point has this characteristic? A. LWAPP B. Rogue AP C. Lightweight AP D. Autonomous AP Answer: C
Explanation: Lightweight Access Point is an 802.11 a/b/g dual-band, zero-touch configuration and management access point that provides secure, cost effective wireless access with advanced WLAN services for enterprise deployments. This lightweight access point provides industry-leading RF capabilities to increase wireless LAN performance, security, reliability, and scalability. Lightweight access point provides a single point of management and reduces the security concern of a stolen access point. Answer B is incorrect. Autonomous AP is a wireless access point that does not rely on a central control device. It is also called Standalone Access Point. Home offices, corporate offices, or Wi-Fi hot-spots have autonomous access points. Autonomous AP is deployed as a standalone device in ISR routers at branch sites. Answer D is incorrect. LWAPP (Lightweight Access Point Protocol) is a protocol used to control multiple Wi-Fi wireless access points at once. This can reduce the amount of time spent on configuring, monitoring, or troubleshooting a large network. This also allows network administrators to closely analyze the network. Answer A is incorrect. A rogue access point is a wireless access point that has either been installed on a secure company network without explicit authorization from a local network administrator, or has been created to allow a cracker to conduct a man-in-the-middle attack. Rogue access points create a security threat to large organizations because anyone with access to the premises can maliciously install an inexpensive wireless router that can allow access to a secure network to unauthorized parties.

Rogue access points do not employ mutual authentication.
