NEW QUESTION: 2 Which of the following statements about union decertification is true? A. Employers may lobby employees during the decertification process. B. Decertification does not prevent employees from joining a different union later. C. Decertification only occurs when employees are displeased with the union. D. Half the employees must petition the NLRB before a decertification vote is held. Answer: B Explanation: Explanation: Decertification does not prevent employees from joining a different union later. Indeed, decertification does not prevent employees from rejoining the same union in the future. Decertification is not always indicative of problems with the union. In some cases, a union will decertify because it has outgrown its usefulness, or because the workers wish to file suit against ownership without the interference of the union. Employers are not allowed to lobby employees during the decertification process, and only 30% of the employees need to petition the NLRB for there to be a decertification vote.
