NEW QUESTION: 1A retail client of yours is interested in knowing how high an annual return a major stock index might have, as a once in a twenty year event. The index in question has had an annual return of 11% with a standard deviation of 22%. You believe these returns have been normally distributed. What is the high return that could be expected once in twenty years?A. 22.0%.B. 54.1%.C. 47.2%.Answer: C*Explanation:Once in twenty years is  $1/20 = 5\%$ . So the client seeks the 95th percentile return. This could be obtained by computing a 95% confidence interval. However, since our information will be based at the mean, we should seek the 90% confidence interval, where the other 10% is split between the lower and upper bounds of the distribution. That way, we can obtain the upper 5% figure. The upper bound of the 90% confidence interval is  $11\% + 22\% * 1.645 = 47.2\%$ .
