NEW QUESTION: 1 Which of the following is defined as an occasion when an employer offers an employee some form of reward for completing an action, and then fails to follow through with that reward?
A. Fraudulent misrepresentation
B. Promissory estoppel
C. Duty of good faith
D. Constructive discharge
Answer: B
Explanation: Explanation: A promissory estoppel is defined as an occasion when an employer offers an employee some form of reward for completing an action, and then fails to follow through with that reward. Fraudulent misrepresentation is similar but is defined more broadly as any sort of promise made to a candidate to persuade him to take a position with the company (followed by a failure to act on this promise). Constructive discharge is defined as an employee's decision to quit when an employer creates hostile working conditions. Duty of good faith is simply a tradition of common law by which those who work together are expected to behave in all fairness and honesty toward one another.
