NEW QUESTION: 1 A penetration tester used a client-side browser exploit from metasploit to get an unprivileged shell prompt on the target Windows desktop. The penetration tester then tried using the getsystem command to perform a local privilege escalation which failed. Which of the following could resolve the problem?
A. Load priv module and try getsystem again
B. Run getuid command, then getpriv command, and try getsystem again
C. Run getuid command and try getsystem again
D. Use getprivs command instead of getsystem
Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 2 What information does a router running a link-state protocol use to build and maintain its topological database? (Choose two.)
A. SAP messages sent by other routers
B. TTL packets from designated routers
C. beacons received on point-to-point links
D. routing tables received from other link-state routers
E. hello packets
F. LSAs from other routers
Answer: E, F
Explanation: Neighbor discovery is the first step in getting a link state environment up and running. In keeping with the friendly neighbor terminology, a Hello protocol is used for this step. The protocol will define a Hello packet format and a procedure for exchanging the packets and processing the information the packets contain. After the adjacencies are established, the routers may begin sending out LSAs. As the term flooding implies, the advertisements are sent to every neighbor. In turn, each received LSA is copied and forwarded to every neighbor except the one that sent the LSA.

NEW QUESTION: 3 Which of the following statements are correct:
I. A training set is a set of data used to create a model, while a control set is a set of data is used to prove that the model actually works
II. Cleansing, aggregating or ensuring data integrity is a task for the IT department, and is not a risk manager's responsibility
III. Lack of information on the quality of underlying securities and assets was a major cause of the collapse in the CDO markets during the credit crisis that started in 2007
IV. The problem of lack of historical data can be addressed reasonably satisfactorily by using analytical approaches
A. II and IV
B. I, III and IV
C. I and III
D. All of the above
Answer: C
Explanation: Statement I is correct. Data is often divided into two sets - a 'training set' that is used to create and fine-tune the model while the 'control set' is used to prove that the model works on sample data. Back testing is then performed using actual data that becomes available over time, or may already be available as historical data. Statement II is incorrect. A risk manager often spends a great deal of time in managing data, and ensuring that the data being used is accurate enough for the purpose it is being used for. A risk manager can expect to spend a good part of his or her team's time in cleansing data. While he or she can try to get the IT processes and systems to produce correct data in the first place so it requires minimal subsequent cleansing or validation, this task is likely to remain a key part of a risk manager's role for quite some time in the future given the challenges nearly all organizations face in managing risk data. Statement III is correct. There was not enough granular data available on the underlying components of some of the derivative debt securities whose markets dried up during the crisis that began in 2007. This was because investors became increasingly unsure of what the value of these securities, such as CDOs was, leading to market seizure and firesale prices. Statement IV is not correct. There is no easy solution to the lack of enough historical data, which is used to create as well as test models, and construct stress scenarios. Analytical approaches are not a good enough substitute for real market data. During the recent crisis, many instruments had rather short histories and there was not enough data available, and risk managers and portfolio managers relied upon analytical approaches to value and price them. Many of the assumptions that underpinned these approaches were untested in the real world and turned out to be incorrect. Therefore Choice 'c' is the correct answer and the rest are incorrect.
