NEW QUESTION: 1 CORRECT TEXT DRAG DROP Answer: Explanation: Box 1: Create an IP address pool. Box 2: Install the provider for the hardware load balancer. Box 3: Add a hardware load balancer. Box 4: Create a Virtual IP (VIP) template. Box 5: Copy and modify the App1 service template. Note: *(box 1) When you create a static IP address pool for a VM network, VMM can assign static IP addresses to Windows-based virtual machines (running on any supported hypervisor platform) that use the VM network. By using static IP address pools, IP address management for the virtual environment is brought within the scope of the VMM administrator. *(Box 2, Box 3) Prerequisite for adding a Hardware Load balancer include: You must obtain the load balancer provider from the load balancer vendor, and install the provider on the VMM management server. *Setting the load balancer affinity enables you to provide some control over which load balancer will be used for a service. This is based on logical network information. VMM uses this information to determine the valid static IP address pools that are accessible from both the load balancer and the host group that the service tier will be deployed to. *By adding load balancers to VMM management and by creating associated virtual IP templates (VIP templates), users who create services can automatically provision load balancers when they create and deploy a service. *(box 4) A VIP template contains load-balancer-related configuration settings for a specific type of network traffic. For example, you can create a template that specifies the load-balancing behavior for HTTPS traffic on a specific load balancer by manufacturer and model. *(box 5) A load balancer must be configured before you deploy a service. After a service is deployed, you cannot add a load balancer by updating the service.

NEW QUESTION: 2 A marketing company is using a Customer Relationship Management SaaS. The SaaS provider has deployed hardware load balancers to distribute users between application servers. User login states are preserved in the load balancer. Subsequent login requests direct each user to the same application server. If the server is unavailable or too busy, the user cannot log on. Although the company is very happy with the SaaS cost savings they are unhappy with application availability. To improve application scalability the SaaS provider added new servers to the environment. Users, however, are still experiencing the same problem. Which service characteristic should the SaaS provider implement to improve the user log-on reliability and scale application performance? A. Stateless B. Autonomy C. Reusable D. Abstraction Answer: A
