Topic 5, Scenario 5Application InformationYou are a database administrator for a manufacturing company. You have an application that stores product data. The data will be converted to technical diagrams for the manufacturing process. The product details are stored in XML format. Each XML must contain only one product that has a root element named Product. A schema named Production.ProductSchema has been created for the products.xml. You develop a Microsoft .NET Framework assembly named ProcessProducts.dll that will be used to convert the XML files to diagrams. The diagrams will be stored in the database as images. ProcessProducts.dll contains one class named ProcessProduct that has a method name of Convert(). ProcessProducts.dll was created by using a source code file named ProcessProduct.es. All of the files are located in C:\Products. The application has several performance and security issues. You will create a new database named ProductsDB on a new server that has SQL Server 2012 installed. ProductsDB will support the application. The following graphic shows the planned tables for ProductsDB: You will also add a sequence named Production.ProductID_Seq. You plan to create two certificates named DBCert and ProductsCert. You will create ProductsCert in master. You will create DBCert in ProductsDB. You have an application that executes dynamic T-SQL statements against ProductsDB. A sample of the queries generated by the application appears in Dynamic.sql. Application Requirements The planned database has the following requirements: All stored procedures must be signed. The amount of disk space must be minimized. Administrative effort must be minimized at all times. The original product details must be stored in the database. An XML schema must be used to validate the product details. The assembly must be accessible by using T-SQL commands. A table-valued function will be created to search products by type. Backups must be protected by using the highest level of encryption. ----- Dynamic T-SQL statements must be converted to stored procedures. Indexes must be optimized periodically based on their fragmentation. Manufacturing steps stored in the ManufacturingSteps table must refer to a Product by the same ProductID. ProductDetails_Insert.sql Product.xml All product types are 11 digits. The first five digits of the product id reference the category of the product and the remaining six digits are the subcategory of the product. The following is a sample customer invoice in XML format: ProductsByProductType.sql Dynamic.sql CategoryFromType.sql IndexManagement.sql
