NEW QUESTION: 1The Florida panther, known for its distinctive characteristics, including a kinked tail and cowlicks, is nearing extinction with the help of scientists and government officials. Though once abundant in Florida, by the end of the twentieth century, only approximately 30 Florida panthers remained. Efforts to preserve the panthers had focused on shielding them from human encroachment with the hope that they could develop sustainable numbers to survive as a species. However, pressure from development caused officials to grow impatient and shift their strategy and goals. In 1995, new breeds of female panthers were brought to Florida from Texas to bolster the population. The change has been dramatic. In 1990, 88% of the panthers in Florida had the distinct kinked tail. By 2000, five years after the introduction of the Texas panthers, not a single kitten born to the Texas females had a kinked tail. The breed known as the Florida panther is now on an expedited, ineluctable road to extinction- with the assistance of wildlife protection agencies. If the goal was to have any kind of panther in Florida, it has been realized. Since the introduction of the Texas panthers, the panther population in Florida has risen to approximately 80 mixed-breed panthers. However, this "success" could portend a tragic trend in wildlife management in the United States. We cannot and should not create genetically mixed species as a means of achieving a compromise between the needs of development and a species' survival. This type of species tampering is a perversion of the ideal of wildlife management and will irrevocably transform our national landscape. The author suggests that blame for the extinction of Florida panthers rests chiefly upon A. wildlife agencies that did not act sooner to protect the panther population. B. government officials who bowed to pressure from developers. C. scientists who suggested interbreeding as a solution. D. advocates of species preservation. E. developers who encroached upon protected areas. Answer: B Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Explanation: Several sentences point the blame at government officials. The first sentence states that the panther "is nearing extinction with the help of scientists and government officials." The last sentence in the first paragraph reveals that officials opted for interbreeding because "pressure from development caused [them] to grow impatient." Finally, the third paragraph tells us that the interbreeding was "a compromise between the needs of development and a species' survival." Thus, the blame rests on officials who bowed to pressure from developers. The author does not state that developers are encroaching upon protected areas (choice b), and although fingers are pointed at scientists in the first sentence, nothing indicates that scientists suggested the solution (choice c). Choices d and e are incorrect because the passage does not mention advocates of species preservation or suggests that agencies did not act quickly enough. Rather, the problem is that agencies wanted to act too quickly.
