NEW QUESTION: 1 If a service can have one or more service capabilities, then how can a service consumer interact with a service?A. Service capabilities are designed to be composed together, which means that in order for a service consumer to interact with a service, it must be designed to invoke all of its service capabilities at the same time.B. It can't. The service must only provide one service capability in order for it to be accessible by service consumers.C. Services do not have service capabilities that are explicitly invoked. Services almost always exist as event-driven programs that transparently intercept service consumer messages at runtime.D. Each service capability represents a function that the service has to offer. The service consumer can invoke and interact with one service capability at a time, thereby only using a subset of the service's overall functionality.Answer: D

NEW QUESTION: 2 Which three statements are true regarding MAB?A. It allows exemptions from 802.1X authentication.B. It uses EAP to authenticate users.C. It uses certificates in the authentication process.D. It is commonly configured with network printers.E. The MAC address is sent in a RADIUS Access-Request message.Answer: A,D,E*Explanation: MAC Authentication Bypass (MAB) is an authentication option that allows certain systems that do not have an 802.1X supplicant to access the network while still maintaining a consistent configuration across switch access ports. MAB utilizes a database of the MAC addresses of systems that are allowed access to the network. To do this, MAB specifies a set of MAC addresses that are allowed to skip authentication. MAC Authentication Bypass (MAB) is an authentication option that allows certain systems that do not have an 802.1X supplicant to access the network while still maintaining a consistent configuration across switch access ports. After detecting a client on an 802.1X port, the authenticator waits for an Ethernet frame from the client. The authenticator sends an Access-Request message using the MAC address of the endpoint as both the username and the password to the Remote Authentication Dial-In User Service (RADIUS) server. MAC Authentication Bypass (MAB) is an authentication option that allows certain systems that do not have an 802.1X supplicant to access the network while still maintaining a consistent configuration across switch access ports. Common examples include network printers and security cameras. 802.1X authentication utilizes certificates during the authentication process, not MAC Authentication Bypass (MAB). MAB specifies a set of MAC addresses that are allowed to skip authentication. 802.1X uses the Extensible Authentication Protocol (EAP) to authenticate users who wish to access the network, not MAB. EAP messages are exchanged between a supplicant and an authenticator, which are tunneled inside the

EAPOL and Remote Authentication Dial-In User Service (RADIUS) protocols.

NEW QUESTION: 3 You deploy a Forefront Identity Manager (FIM) 2010 server in your company network. You create bidirectional synchronization rules for an Active Directory Domain Services (AD DS) data source and a Microsoft SQL Server data source. Both synchronization rules have the same input and output attribute flows and an equal precedence. You need to prevent the department attribute defined in the AD DS to flow into the SQL Server data source. You also need to ensure that all other attributes retain an equal precedence flow. What should you do? (Each correct answer presents part of the solution. Choose all that apply.)
A. Add the department attribute to the inbound attribute flow.
B. Add the department attribute to the outbound attribute flow.
C. Create a new inbound and outbound synchronization rule that has the highest precedence for the AD DS data source.
D. Create a new outbound synchronization rule that has the highest precedence for the SQL Server data source.
E. Create a new outbound synchronization rule that has the highest precedence for the AD DS data source.
Answer: B,D

NEW QUESTION: 4 Process-level redundancy is implemented by a system manager process that creates the standby process. What two functions are provided by the system-level process called Qnet Symlink Manager (QSM)? (Choose two.)
A. backing up the information for the broken connections
B. provides an abstract name for a process or service
C. detection of a failed connection
D. provides common information for connecting processes and services
E. distribution of symbolic link information
Answer: B,E
Explanation: 1.4. SP high end product 1.4.01. IOS-XR structure
Process-Level Redundancy
Process-level redundancy is implemented by a system manager process creating the standby process. Because the active process created the standby process, the active process has all the information that it needs to communicate with the standby process. The active process uses a checkpoint database to share running state with the standby process. Symbolic links and abstract names are used to identify the processes. Clients do not see the standby process until the active goes away. If a process fails and it has created a standby process, a system-level process called QNet Symlink Manager (QSM) and a library called Event Connection Manager (ECM) are used to re-establish links from the clients to the processes. QSM provides:
Distribution of symbolic link information
Abstract name for a process or service
ECM provides:
Common information for connecting processes and services
Detection of broken connections
Only processes considered essential by development engineers are designated to support process-level redundancy. This is not a user-configurable option. Clients have to reconnect to the "new" active process (the "original" standby process) when they detect that the active process has failed. Clients can connect to it using the symbolic links and abstract names. The new active process creates a new standby process. The general steps in process redundancy are:
The active process dies.
The standby process becomes the active process.
A new standby process starts.
The new active process begins sending updates to the new standby process.
Clients begin using the new active process through the symbolic links and abstract names.
