NEW QUESTION: 1 A user has enabled termination protection on an EC2 instance. The user has also set Instance initiated shutdown behavior to terminate. When the user shuts down the instance from the OS, what will happen?A. It will terminate the instanceB. The OS will shutdown but the instance will not be terminated due to protectionC. It is not possible to set the termination protection when an Instance initiated shutdown is set to terminatedD. It will not allow the user to shutdown the instance from the OSAnswer: A*Explanation:It is always possible that someone can terminate an EC2 instance using the Amazon EC2 console,command line interface or API by mistake. If the admin wants to prevent the instance from being accidentally terminated, he can enable termination protection for that instance. The user can also setup shutdown behavior for an EBS backed instance to guide the instance on what should be done when he initiates shutdown from the OS using Instance initiated shutdown behaviour. If the instance initiated behavior is set to terminate and the user shuts off the OS even though termination protection is enabled, it will still terminate the instance.Reference: <http://docs.aws.amazon.com/AWSEC2/latest/UserGuide/terminating-instances.html>

NEW QUESTION: 2 Take a very commonplace, often discussed and critical topic: Are we detecting a greenhouse effect, and related to this, is it exacerbated by "homogenic factors," i.e., human actions? Most would be inclined to give a positive answer to both of these questions. But, if pushed, what would be the evidence, and how well grounded would it be for such affirmations? Within scientific communities and associated scientifically informed circles, the answers have to be somewhat more ambiguous, particularly when rigorous questions concerning evidence are raised. Were scientific truth to be a matter of consensus, and some argue that scientific truth often turns out to be just that, then it is clear that there is beginning to be a kind of majority consensus among many earth science practitioners that the temperature of the Earth, particularly of the oceans, is indeed rising and that this is a crucial indicator for a possible greenhouse effect. Most of these scientists admit that the mean oceanic temperature has risen globally in the last several decades. But this generalization depends upon how accurate measurements may be, not just for samples, but also for the whole Earth. A hot spot, for example the now four year old hot spot near New Guinea which is part of the El Niño cycle, does not count by itself because it might be balanced by cold spots elsewhere. And the fact of the matter is that "whole earth measurements" are still rare and primitive in the simple sense that we simply do not have enough thermometers out. Secondly, even if we had enough thermometers, a simply synchronic whole earth measurement over three decades is but a blip in the diachronic history of ice age cycles over the last tens of thousands of years. Thirdly, even if we know that the earth is now heating up, has an ever increasing ozone hole, and from this strange weather effects can be predicted, how much of this is due to homogenic factors, such as CFCs, CO2 increases, hydrocarbon burning, and the like? Is it really the case, as Science magazine claimed in 1990, "24% of greenhouse encouraging gases are of homogenic origin"? The author of the passage would be most likely to agree with which of the following statements about the greenhouse effect? A. There is a greenhouse effect that is exacerbated by homogenic factors. B. 24% of greenhouse encouraging gases are of homogenic origin. C. One can determine if mean oceanic temperatures have risen globally in the last several decades only if measurements of ocean temperatures are precise. D. Hot spots, such as the El Niño cycle, should not be counted as a factor in the greenhouse effect. E. The ozone hole is increasing due to homogenic factors, such as CFCs, CO2 increases, hydrocarbon burning, and the like. Answer: C

Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Explanation: Scientists are basing their claims on global warming on rising ocean temperatures. One can tell if temperatures have in fact risen only by measuring them correctly.

NEW QUESTION: 3 Which code fragment demonstrates the proper way to handle JDBC resources? A. Try {ResultSet rs = stmt.executableQuery (query); statement stmt = con.createStatement(); while (rs.next()) { /* ... */ } catch (SQLException e) {} B. Try {statement stmt = con.createStatement(); ResultSet rs = stmt.executableQuery (query); while (rs.next()) { /* ... */ } finally {rs.close(); stmt.close();} C. Try {ResultSet rs = stmt.executableQuery (query); statement stmt = con.createStatement(); while (rs.next()) { /* ... */ } finally {rs.close(); stmt.close();} D. Try {statement stmt = con.createStatement(); ResultSet rs = stmt.executableQuery (query); while (rs.next()) { /* ... */ } catch (SQLException e) {} Answer: B
Explanation: We should use the finally statement to gracefully close the connection.
