NEW QUESTION: 1 Company A is a retailer operating in several cities. The individual store managers deposit daily collections at a local bank in a non-interest bearing checking account. Twice per week, the local bank issues a depository transfer check (DTC) to the central bank at headquarters. The controller of the company is considering using a wire transfer instead. The additional cost of each transfer would be US $25. Collections would be accelerated by 2 days, and the annual interest rate paid by the central bank is 7.2% (0.02% per day). At what amount of dollars transferred would it be economically feasible to use a wire transfer instead of the DTC? Assume a 360-day year. A. Any amount greater than US $62,500. B. It would never be economically feasible. C. Any amount greater than US $173. D. US $125,000 or above. Answer: A
Explanation: Given a US $25 fee and an interest rate of 0.02% per day for 2 days, the breakeven amount is US $62,500 [ $$25 \text{ transfer fee} \times 2 \times .02\% \text{ interest rate}$ ].
